SECURITY COUNCIL – OPEN DEBATE

CONFLICT PREVENTION AND SUSTAINING PEACE

STATEMENT BY GEORG SPARBER

DEPUTY PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE, CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES A.I.

Mr. President,

Liechtenstein thanks the Swedish presidency, and in particular Foreign Minister Wallström, for this open Security Council debate on conflict prevention and sustaining peace. After a year of overwhelming conflict-induced human suffering, a discussion on how to strengthen preventive action in the United Nations is indeed timely and pertinent, not least in light of the Security Council's difficulties in finding appropriate responses to many of the predominant crises of our time. We also warmly welcome the Secretary-General at his first official appearance in the Security Council and thank him for outlining his vision for a renewed emphasis on prevention as well as his commitment to stronger diplomacy for peace. A close and well-functioning working relationship between the Secretary-General and the Security Council will be a crucial element in that regard.

Liechtenstein welcomes the shift initiated by General Assembly resolution 70/262 and Security Council resolution 2282 (2016) towards a more comprehensive approach to sustaining peace, spanning the entire conflict cycle from early warning and action to reconciliation, reconstruction and development and flowing through all three pillars of the United Nations, including development and human rights. The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development itself reflects such a comprehensive approach, in particular in SDG 16. If thoroughly implemented, the SDGs can be a powerful prevention tool and the same holds for the United Nations body of human rights obligations. At the same time, gaps in the implementation of sustainable development commitments and consistent violations of human rights obligations are important early warning signals that can constitute the basis of the United Nations to take early and preventive action.

Mr. President,

The Security Council and the General Assembly have both committed to a comprehensive approach to transitional justice when reviewing the United Nations Peacebuilding architecture. Transitional justice is an important prerequisite for consolidating peace and preventing conflicts and it decreases the likelihood that post-conflict societies relapse into conflict. Research on transitional justice has turned attention to the possibility of using transitional justice while a conflict is ongoing in an attempt to resolve disputes and grievances sooner, thus bringing the conflict to an end more quickly. This is one of many reasons why Liechtenstein initiated the resolution by the General Assembly 71/248 to establish an international, impartial and independent mechanism (IIIM) that will collect and preserve evidence of the most serious crimes committed in Syria since March 2011. In addition to contributing to justice, the mechanism will also have a deterrent effect.

Mr. President,

Deterrence is a key preventive tool and one of the main achievements of the International Criminal Court (ICC) when it comes to preventing mass atrocities. As the international judicial institution promoting accountability and an end to impunity, the ICC directly contributes to preventing the commission of future atrocity crimes. It is also an important global institution in the context of UN Security Council resolution 1325 for its pioneering work on gender justice. By recognizing a range of sexual and gender-based crimes experienced by women in conflict the ICC also acts to deter the commission of these crimes in the future.

Mr. President,

Membership in the Security Council is a privilege that entails the responsibility to take action when confronted with mass atrocity crimes in conflict situations. The Code of Conduct on Security Council Action against Genocide, Crimes Against Humanity or War Crimes, as elaborated by the ACT Group, is an expression of commitment that Council members will take timely and decisive action aimed at preventing or ending said crimes. The Code of Conduct is also a pledge not to vote against a credible draft resolution before the Security Council aimed at ending or preventing the commission of genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes. Recent experience in the Council shows that unfortunately we are still far from realizing this vision. 112 UN Member States have signed the Code, among them a majority of Council members, and these 112 States expect the Code to be applied in practice, including on the basis of information provided by the Secretary-General. We therefore encourage the implementation of the Code in the Council and call on all the remaining UN Member States, especially Council members and those aspiring to become members, to join the Code of Conduct.

I thank you
